"A Letter to Our Readers and Their Parents!"

IT IS OUR EARNEST HOPE THAT YOU ENJOY reading our magazines. You know, there are many different kinds of stories, and we get a different kind of satisfaction from each one. We like the stories of Robin Hood and the Iliad of Homer, because we can imagine ourselves heroes, overcoming the enemy. We like stories of great men in history, because they make us ambitious to do good, kind deeds. We like stories of mischievous boys like Tom Sawyer, because Tom does many of the things we would enjoy doing, but some of them we cannot do.

Some of you probably choose books with a lot of pictures, because the pictures seem to make the story live. That, to some extent, explains your interest in comics.

In our magazines, we try to give you good pictures and interesting stories. We would like to feel, also, that we are helping you to take a stand in favor of right and justice, develop respect for law and order, and learn to protect weaker people, just like the heroes in our adventure stories.

The grown-ups of this world owe you young people an apology, because we haven't made the world a very secure and peaceful place in which to live. Our comics portray, it is true, some of the unhappy things that happen in the world. But they are things you know about anyway—and in the stories, at least, the good people always win. All of us wish it were that way in real life as well.

Just as there are good and bad people, good and bad radio programs, good and bad movies, so there is good and bad literature. In order to help you always choose the good, we will continue to do our best to maintain a high standard in our own magazines.

Please remember that comics, with their many pictures, are just one type of literature. We also want you to grow familiar with the great books in our vast literary heritage, and we have no doubt that, with guidance from your parents, teachers, and town librarians, you will become interested in those classics, and learn to love them.

Meanwhile, don't forget, though you can get the thrill of humor and adventure in comic magazines—they should, nonetheless, be considered in two ways: Not only for the pleasure they give you, but also as a stepping-stone to your appreciation of books that have stood the test of time as reading fare for all people, young and old.

Incidentally, one of our recent editorials used the word "endorsement" in connection with Dr. Thompson's services to us as Editorial Consultant. In the interest of further clarification of Dr. Thompson's functions, we wish to state that Marvel Comic Group submits all its published magazines to Dr. Thompson for review, criticism, and report to our staff, which is under constant instruction to accept Dr. Thompson's criticisms, and to abide by the same. In this way, we constantly strive to bring better comic magazines to our vast group of readers.

LOVE THAT LAWN

MICKEY gazed at his father. "But, D-Dad, you don't understand."

"Young man, I understand that you haven't mowed that lawn or trimmed that hedge, or tended to that garden in more than two weeks!" replied his father sternly.

"Honest, Dad, I'll do anything you say, but I can't do it this afternoon. I've got a date with Laury Howland," Mickey said pleadingly.

"Laury Howland will have to wait. Your own father has waited two weeks for you to get around to doing a few simple tasks." Mr. Wright adjusted his glasses and settled back into his easy chair.

Mickey was about to further the discussion when Mr. Wright looked up determinedly. "Michael, if you want money for the country club dance next week, and if you intend using my car as transportation, just see that the lawn is mowed, the hedge trimmed and the garden weeded."

Mickey realized that this was final. His father meant what he said about his allowance and the family car. The situation was desperate. If he didn't see Laury this afternoon, she'd probably get sore as Satan at him. He knew it wouldn't do any good at all to call her on the telephone. Laury was a very popular girl and an excuse like mowing the lawn wouldn't convince her that she wasn't being stood up. And she'd probably break the date they had for the big country club dance next week—then where would he be?

Outside, on the porch, he thought for a few minutes, but it all seemed helpless. Every way he turned he was blocked. Mickey shrugged his shoulders. "Might just as well get the lawn mower out. I've still got an hour before my date with Laury. Maybe something will happen."

The lawn was being mowed very unenthusiastically when Jack and Porky Gleason came into view. Jack and Porky were twins whose chief claim to fame was their brilliance in managing to do the least amount of work in the shortest possible time.

"Hi, pals! You wouldn't want to do me a slight favor, fellows, would you?" Mickey asked eagerly.

"Unh-Unh," the twins chorused in unison.

They looked at Mickey leaning despairingly on the handle of the lawn mower. Jack said, "We might know someone who would help you. What's your trouble?"

Mickey explained the situation, exaggerating some details to make his plight sound more desperate. "So you see, guys," he concluded, "that's the deal. I'm licked without even having a fighting chance. You wouldn't reconsider. I'd pay you for mowing as soon as I can get some money."

The twins looked at Mickey and then at each other. They shook their heads negatively.

"Michael, my lost lamb," said Porky suddenly, "have you ever read 'Tom Sawyer'—and if not—well, have you?"

"Huh?" said Mickey, puzzled. "What's that got to do with the lawn?"

Jack and Porky shook their heads sadly. "Look, you fugitive from enlightenment—it's like this. Remember the part where that genius, Tom, convinces his friends that there was nothing else he'd rather do than whitewash the fence. He even convinced them to the point where they were paying him off. That, my stupid-looking friend, is the key to success and an assured future of not having to do most anything."

"You mean that I should mow the lawn and look real happy about it, and then some eager beaver'll come along, and I can talk him into doing all the work for me?" he asked suspiciously.

"At times you show a very feeble brain supply, Mickey. But that's all we can expect," sighed Porky. "Yes, that's the only solution. And we know that it works!" he added significantly.

"Okay, I'll try it, but I want you fellows to stick around. I don't have much time and I may need some advice." Mickey started to push the lawn mower.

The twins seated themselves on the edge of the lawn. "Hey, Mickey. Make that smile look real. It's sickly from here," shouted Porky.

"Try whistling. And make it peppy. Square your shoulders," added Jack.

"Boy, if I weren't in such a mess, I'd . . ." Mickey glared at the twins.

"Ifs and buts don't carry much weight, and . . . watch it! Here comes Ted Jackson."

Mickey burst out in song. He danced a jig as he pushed the lawn mower.

"Hi there, Teddy, old man!" Mickey waved his hand at Ted.

"What's his trouble?" asked Ted with a bewildered look.

"No trouble, Ted," shouted Mickey loudly. "I just happen to be doing the work I love. That's all. There's something about cutting the sweet green grass in the beautiful sunlight . . . When I finish this, I'm going to trim the hedge. Yessir. But I'm saving the best for last. Dad said if I wanted to, I could weed the garden. Maybe I'm not the happiest boy in town today. Yessir." Mickey danced around the lawn, singing all the while.

"Why don't you wait till the sun's gone down a bit, Mike? Take it easy. After all, the lawn will be here tomorrow," Ted replied.

"That's what we told him," said Jack. "But he loves to do it. He wouldn't let us come near him. Porky asked if he could mow just a little patch—golly! I thought he'd have a fit. And when I asked if I could pick just a few weeds—well I won't even describe what happened then." Jack shook his head wisely.

"You ask him, Ted," said Porky. "Maybe he likes you better than he does us."

"Well, gee, do you think he'd let me? I don't want him to think that I'm butting in," said Ted.

"All I know is that I'd give my two weeks' allowance if he'd let me put my hands on the lawn mower. And don't think I didn't offer two weeks allowance. But, you know how it is!" Porky sighed.

"Sure . . . er . . . I know how it is," said a very confused Ted.

"Say, Mickey. Wouldn't you like to rest a few minutes. How about giving me a turn at that lawn mower?" Ted asked anxiously.

At a warning signal from the twins, Mickey shook his head violently. "Me . . . REST?? No sir. Nothing could make me stop now." He pushed the mower with renewed energy.

"Well, if that's the way you feel about it . . . okay." Ted shrugged his shoulders.

Mickey looked at his watch. "Gee, Ted, I hate to disappoint an old friend."

"Never mind. I wouldn't want to deprive you of doing something you obviously love so well," Ted answered.

Mickey shoved the handle of the lawn mower into Ted's hands.

"Here, Buddy!" he said dramatically.

"Now, wait a minute. I don't . . ." Ted put the lawn mower back in Mickey's hands.

"Ted, because I like you, I'll give you two weeks' allowance—if, after you've mowed the lawn, you realize that there's nothing else you'd rather do than weed the garden. I'm making quite a sacrifice, but—aren't we buddies?" Mickey was already on his way down the street.

The twins smiled at a deed well done. They picked themselves up and said to Ted, "Do you really know how lucky you are? He's giving you two weeks allowance—sometime."

Ted just scratched his head, and wondered what was exciting about the lawn.

As Mickey sped toward Laury's house he figured that it would be three months before he could get around to paying Ted. He also figured that it would take some terrific explaining to his father as to why the hedge wasn't trimmed. He felt that if he had tried to convince Ted of that too,—well there wouldn't be much hope.

Laury was sitting in the garden, looking cool and comfortable. "You're ten minutes late, Mickey. But that's all right . . . I have a teensy little favor to ask of you," Laury said—a little too sweetly.

"Sure, anything!" Mickey beamed.

"Would you mind taking these nasty weeds out of our garden?"

Mickey gulped and told himself that if it weren't for that dance . . .

When the back-breaking task was completed, Laury said to an exhausted Mickey, "Since you've been so sweet about the garden, I know you won't mind when I tell you that I won't be here for the dance. Mother's . . . Mickey, you don't look so well!"
